

Spoliation is the intentional destruction of evidence that may entitle the party harmed by the destruction to an adverse inference instruction that the evidence would have been detrimental to the destroyer's case.